During the years spent in Pharmaceuticals (1982-2017) I had the chance and the challenge of living important changes in clinical development. These were mainly linked to the increasing knowledge and understanding of biology and physiopathology of many diseases and to the increased need of transparency in clinical data generation.

The impact of Good Clinical Practices in clinical development and the easier access to medical information with the consequent request of visibility and transparency forced pharma companies to deeply review the way of design and conduct clinical trials.

More recently, the availability of biotech drugs for rare diseases drove to new models of drug development. As Medical Director of a company where the research and development of new drugs is the real engine of the enterprise, I had to redesign the medical department in order to meet the level of efficiency and transparency requested by the company, by regulators and by the patients. We designed and implemented Standard Operating Procedures regulating each single step of each activity involving the medical dep. New Medical positions have been created to ensure a correct medical info to clinical investigators involved in clinical trials and to physicians using new drugs.

Doing such significative changes, always during all my career I have been inspired by what I felt as my mission: to serve the patients at my best.

In May 2016 I was one of the four winners of the “Jeff Grebb for Excellence in Leadership Award” “in recognition of his continued leadership of the Italian Medical Organization”
